Abstract

The Iscte International Staff Week provides an international and interdisciplinary space for higher education staff to reflect on well being, sustainability and urban challenges shaping contemporary universities and cities, recognizing universities as key actors within complex urban ecosystems.

Through presentations, interactive activities, panels and peer exchange, participants will explore how institutional practices, campus environments and its ecosystem can address pressing urban challenges, promoting well-being and sustainability. The programme encourages critical reflection on current challenges in higher education and promotes the sharing of experience and good practices:

- Contribute to SGD 11 by promoting reflection on how higher education institutions can foster inclusive, safe, resilient and sustainable campuses and cities through well being centred and socially responsible practices.

- Support more effective responses to societal and urban challenges by strengthening a digital education ecosystem that enhances skills development, critical thinking and digital literacy across sectors and communities.

By combining professional development, intercultural dialogue and informal networking, the staff week aims to strengthen cooperation among institutions and urban stakeholders contributing to more human centred, resilient and sustainable universities within their broader urban environments.

Objectives

- To promote reflection and dialogue on student and staff well being in higher education.

- To share good practices on how universities can address urban challenges as active and engaged actors within their cities.

- To inspire institutions to integrate well being focused and sustainability oriented approaches into their strategies and daily practices.

- To strengthen Erasmus+ institutional cooperation and staff networks in response to shared societal and urban challenges.
